Legion Head Hits
CIA's Judgment

John E. Davis, national commander of the American Legion said yesterday the Central Intelligence Agency "probably ought to exercise a little better judgment" in its selection of intelligence and general information sources.

Davis made the comment in response to a question about a three-line criticism of the National Students Association, contained in a special Americanism Commission bulletin at the opening of the Legion's seventh annual Washington Conference.

"It still is policy," Davis said of a 1963 Legion resolution attacking the NSA for campus programs which "embrace the important lines of the Communist Party."
